Manuel Meyers, the 15th instant, a Negro Woman named HANNAH, (the property of William Toller, of Half-Moon, Albany County) she may be about 18 or 20 years old, pretty lusty, of a colour bordering on the Indian; had on when she went away a short gown and a brown petticoat; she wore a green ribband on her cap, and small ruffles on her arms; she will probably pretend to be a free woman.—Whoever takes her up, and brings her to said Manuel Myers, in Broad-street, No. 47; or to said William Toller, at Half-Moon, shall be well rewarded for their trouble. 3tw—78

POPE.

THE rise and fall of kingdoms, states and empires, is a theme which the wonderful genius of man can never exhaust. It is a field for the expatiation of the most sublime exertions of the mind; and while at one view it fills us with wonder and admiration, the next depresses us with sympathetic grief.

Through the long perspective of distant time we can perceive the rude and infant states of Greece gradually rise to the very summit of perfection, in every thing that was great, grand, or sublime.—Then how pleasing the prospect! how delightful to contemplate! how inviting to converse with philosophers, poets, statesmen, and heroes—not ensanguined conquerors that drenched the world in blood to satisfy ambition, but heroes actuated by virtue alone, who nobly set self-interest at defiance, and boldly stepped forward to the gulph of danger, to save the sinking remains of their native country: For such deeds, admiration has paid the tribute of applause they so justly deserved, and I dare say futurity will not be a bankrupt in gratitude; but if it should, the pen of the historian would emblazon them to eternity.—In this state of grandeur and opulence, man beheld with amazement and delight the works which his own industry had raised, and walked with reverence and respect through the superb temples erected by the hands of grace and taste.

But O what a sad reverse succeeded this!—See them, as it were, seized by the hand of fate, and dashed round the world in tumbling monuments, objects for the curious eye, and rescuing hand of the penetrating philosopher to erect at will. Where are the temples, adorned with statues, that only wanted the Promethean touch to bid them start into life?—Ask Time, and he will tell you, alas! that they are fallen back into their parent earth, among the rude masses from which the ingenuity of man had extracted them. Perhaps the heedless foot of some rude peasant imprints the grave of the immortal Plato; and the dust of Socrates may now be the sport of winds:—What a melancholy reflection!—The sympathetic heart wishes to draw a veil over the quick assembling train which contemplating fancy conjures up to view, and almost prompts us to wish that the lapse of time had obliterated their remembrance from the mind of man.

In every age of the world we find that empires arose from states of barbarism, to the utmost perfections of refinement; after which, they more rapidly decreased to situations that only demand pity, when their former elevation was considered. From hence we might deduce an inference, that God, for some wise purpose, has ordained that man, in a state of civil society, shall not exceed a certain degree of refinement; but that their arts shall be transplanted into distant climes, where they shall meliorate and humanize the savage sons of ferocity.

When I apply these remarks to America, and behold her citizens tinged with the European propensities, that almost abrogate virtue—propensities widely different from the principles by which the Grecians, Romans, and Carthaginians, arose in the world's esteem; for with them, self-interest was set at defiance, and the love of country superseded every mercenary temptation; the love of liberty and the love of conquest (as in those days the words were almost synonymous) were only sufficient to compel them to draw the sword, or rescue their country from the grasp of the foe.—I say, when I take a view of this western empire, and find it impelled by almost the same fascination that draws an ominous cloud of dissolution over the greatest kingdom in Europe, I feel an indeliberable concern for the duration of our Colossal republic, the last retreat of insulted liberty, and the refuge of fellow mortals who had spirit to contend for their usurped birthright—the privileges of Freedom—the privileges of Nature.

But why should the gloomy mind descend? or why should fortitude sink beneath the load of apprehension? For let it be eternally engraven on our minds, that wisdom in our governors, and virtue in our citizens, will enable us to surmount every obstacle; and without these, it were vain to flatter ambition or pamper pride. Without them, liberty will degenerate into licentiousness, commerce deviate from national interest to selfish mercenary views, freedom become a curse, and the wide, benevolent wish of the liberal heart, that socially embraces the circle of humanity, will drop into disgust—or, sharing the surrounding contagion, gradually blend with the sliding multitude.

These observations plainly tell us how much it behoves every citizen of our infant empire, to contribute his mite towards the public weal; to check in their progress the vices of the age; to encourage virtue; to promote the arts, that the mind of man may be illuminated with understanding; to cultivate learning and useful knowledge; and enlighten the pages of future history with the records of a nation, formed, as we may hope, to disseminate light, liberty, and peace, over the wide extended universe.

Thoughts on Raillery.

A VERY ingenious French moralist observes, that "he who sets up for a banterer shall be followed by every one, but be loved by nobody." Those who delight most in hearing other people bantered, have the greatest aversion to banterers. The more they feel the sharpness and malignity of raillery, the more they dread becoming the object of it. As aromatics give a pleasing relish to the most insipid food, but become disgusting and pernicious when used with indifferetion; so wit and raillery sometimes rouses a sleepy company; but, when carried beyond the bounds of prudence, never fails to give disgust, and to procure the retailer of them inveterate enemies. Genuine wit is a rare talent, but requires a great share of sense to moderate it; wit being like to one of our mineral medicines, the best and most efficacious in the hands of a skilful physician, but the most dangerous and pernicious when prepared by ignorant empiricks. Such however is the general misfortune of wits, that they seldom know how properly to act the part they attempt. To attempt to be witty at all times, and upon all occasions, is certainly an egregious error; since every subject will not admit of it, nor is every one always in a humour to receive it. The tender parent who has lost an only child, or the widow, who, in the death of a good husband, has lost the support of herself and children, will not be persuaded to drown their grief in all the wit which the ingenuity of man can utter; on the contrary, it will add to their affliction, as they will take it an insult on their grief. Banter the soldier upon the blood he has spilt in the field of Mars, the coxcomb on the nicety of his dress, and the prude on the multitude of hearts she has conquered, and they will each pay the greatest respect to your wit; but the moment you suffer your wit to fall on a personal defect which the party is sensible of, and wishes to conceal, from that moment you acquire an implacable enemy. Nothing, indeed, (such is the depravity of human nature) will sooner raise the general laugh of a company than personal wit; but though you gain the laugh, you perhaps lose the hearts of all present. An ill-timed witticism has often robbed the fair of a man who might have made an amiable partner; and I fear wit has done more mischief in the empire of beauty than that fatal disease which generally makes such havock on their lovely faces.

LONDON, July 30.

Letters from Paris, dated July 10, mention, that the celebrated l'Abbe Mably, who lately died in that city, aged near eighty, has left several curiosities to Dr. Franklin, and a large collection of valuable books to the college at Philadelphia.

The late Francis Augustus, duke of Sleswich Holstein, was born the 20th of September, 1711, and elected bishop of Lubec in the year 1750. The bishop of that See is alternately chosen by the citizens and the chapter, which consists of 26 cannons, of four whom are Catholics, and 22 Protestants.

They write from Tangiers, that the English brigantine the Sally was lately arrived there, having on board Mr. Payne, the new Plenipotentiary and Consul-General of Great-Britain to the states of Morocco. That minister was set out directly for Morocco, where the Emperor at that time was.

The Dutch city of Rotterdam is governed by a police so formed and executed, that the doors and windows are seldom fastened, and robberies are hardly ever heard of. One matter that conduces much to the public safety is, that all vagrants are, upon discovery, taken into custody, and sent to the rasp house, where they are kept to hard labour for a time, and then sent out of the country.

All our letters from the North of England, contain the most melancholy accounts of the crops of corn, hay, &c. the present long-continued drought having deprived them of three fourths of their expected produce.

It is not more singular than true, that several heavy showers of rain fell at Corydon and Norwood, in Surrey, on Sunday morning last, though no rain was seen at Streatham, in that neighbourhood.

S A L E M, September 13.

On Saturday last the ship Atlantick, commanded by Captain Trefethen, but having on board, as freighter and supercargo, Captain Jonathan Ingerfoll, of this town, arrived here from New-York: On his passage from New-York, he was three days successively in fight of the schooner Amity, which, from the particular description he had received of her, he well knew; but circumstances did not admit of her being captured. Just before he got in, he spoke with a fisherman in the Bay, who informed that he had been along side the schooner, and sold the people some fish, for which they paid the money; but that he knew not what they were. Captain Ingerfoll, on the day of his arrival, saw the Amity near Cape-Ann, and concluded, from her appearance, that the crew intended to make a harbour. Immediately on his landing, and giving the above intelligence, a fast sailing brig, belonging to E. H. Derby, was fitted and armed, in order to go in quest of her, and at 3 o'clock, P. M. she was under sail, with 50 or 60 respectable volunteers on board. Very soon after quitting the harbour, they saw the schooner, standing in; and that their design might not be suspected, inclined to the eastward, 'till, finding themselves several leagues without her, they tacked, and came in after her. They discovered her at anchor a mile or two from Marblehead harbour; and, on coming up with her, several gentlemen from the brig boarded her, when they found only three white men and a negro; Squire, Mathews, Stewart the mulatto, and a negro, having gone on shore at Marblehead. The schooner was brought into this harbour, and the men taken in her, committed to prison. Squire, and those ashore with him, were found at a tavern, taken before a magistrate, examined, and brought over the next morning, and the whole properly secured in jail.

On board the schooner, one man, said to be named Wise, or Wiseman, was found in irons. It is said he was taken on board at the Vineyard, as a passenger for Newbury-Port; whither the pirates told him they were bound; but having displeased them, they thought proper to confine him. The remainder consisted of the same persons who were on board when Captain Duncanson was turned adrift. They had two pieces of cannon, and were armed, besides, with pistols, cutlasses, &c. &c.

The following writing was found on board the above schooner, and there is scarcely a doubt of the several names and marks subscribed being the real signatures of the villains now imprisoned for piracy.

The Right Hon. the Marquis de la Fayette, never ceasing to promote the interest of America, has procured proposals from a company for taking a large quantity of whale oil of different qualities from America, on very advantageous terms to the shippers, having obtained a remission of all duties in France in their favor; payment to be made in the produce and manufactures of that country.

It is likewise proposed that an American company be formed, to avail themselves of the benefit of the plan which promises so much advantage to those who may engage in it, as well as to the community, from the encouragement it will afford to so important a branch of our commerce as the Whale-fishery.

The original articles on the part of the French company are duly executed, and now in the possession of Mr. Breck, of Boston, who has also a sample of the kind of whale oil required. Any gentleman therefore, who desires to be interested in this business, may be informed on the subject by calling on said Breck, at his house, nearly opposite the Mall.

FRIDAY, Sept. 23.

ADDRESS of the JUSTICES of the City and County of Philadelphia. To the Honorable Benjamin Franklin, Esquire, L. L. D.

THE justices of the city and county of Philadelphia, impressed with the most lively sense of your great and extraordinary services to the United States, and this state in particular, approach you with the highest veneration and respect. We are happy, sir, in having it in our power, sincerely to congratulate you upon your return to a city, whose inhabitants, with pleasure recognize the numberless instances of your wisdom, patriotism and benevolence. Our cordial aspirations are, that it may please God to dispense to you every felicity during the remainder of your days, and to make them subservient to the purposes of this, and the other states in the union.

In behalf of the Justices,
PLUNKET FLEESON, Presidt.
September 17, 1785.
To which the Doctor was pleased to return the following answer:

GENTLEMEN,
I AM very sensible of the honor done me by your kind congratulations on my safe return to our country.

To find it in the full enjoyment of peace and liberty, makes me esteem the day of my arrival among the happiest of my life.

That its present felicity in good laws, faithfully executed by a virtuous magistracy, may be long continued, is one of my most fervent prayers.

B. FRANKLIN.

Agreeable to the sentence of the Supreme Court of Saturday last, this day will be executed, the noted villain Benson, who for a long time past has been a terror and nuisance to society.

The sloop Endeavour, Sample, is totally lost at the island of Porto-Rico, the master and 20 of the crew perished.—The gale from N. E. to S. E. began at 7 in the evening of the 25th of August, and continued till 10 the next morning. --- Besides the Endeavour, several schooners and sloops are lost.

It is a great pity, says a Correspondent, that two such elegant churches, as we have in this City, should not receive an additional beauty by furnishing one or both of them with an Organ; such a divine instrument is common in all Churches in Europe, as well as many parts on this Continent. We have now an Organ builder in this City, why should we not give encouragement, and set a subscription on foot, there is not a doubt, but it would speedily amount to a sum adequate to the undertaking.

On the 17 instant died in this city, Mrs. Ann Sloo, aged one hundred and eight years and six months. --- She retained her understanding to her last --- enjoyed for a series of years a good state of health; she was born in New-Castle, Delaware state.

SALEM, Sept. 13.—Captain Henry Williams, on Saturday last, arrived here from St. Martin's. The day before, a gale of wind obliged him to put into Nantucket, when a melancholy accident happened to George Gardner, Esq. of that island. He and two merchants, having a small vessel laying at the wharf, by moving her round a brig, her pendant halliard got foul of the brig's yard, which broke the stump of the small vessel, and it falling on the head of Mr. Gardner, put a period to his life before the close of the day.
